STRUCTURE OF THE NEW GOVERNMENT

The incoming Bolsonaro administration is likely to concentrate policy making across 3 core 'super-ministries', with the nucleus of the government's decision-making designed to reflect its three main priorities: political coordination, economic policy and infrastructure.

Political coordination will be led by Casa Civil, which is effectively the Executive Office of the President. It will be led by Chief of Staff Onyx Lorenzoni who is expected to concentrate all the government's political coordination, including relations with Congress, state governors and local governments.

Economic policy will be led by Paulo Guedes, who will be responsible for leading the administration's efforts to control public spending and deliver on structural reforms.

Infrastructure development is likely to be led by General Oswaldo Ferreira, who will be in charge of proposing new ways to unblock investments across the country. As a result, his influence is expected to extend beyond the current remit and into other related areas such as environmental licensing and land ownership rights.

CHALLENGES IN STRUCTURING TNE NEW ADMINISTRATION

As expected, several proposed mergers of existing government departments, such as merging Agriculture with Environment and folding Industry into a beefed-up Ministry of the Economy have been criticized. Another proposed merger that is expected to generate some opposition is the proposal to scrap the Ministry of Public Safety, which has only been in existence for a matter of months and was created largely at the behest of the gun lobby in Congress, which is expected to be part of Bolsonaro's bases of support in the legislature. If some or all of these planned mergers are dropped, Bolsonaro may encounter difficulties in meeting his objective of having only 15 ministries.

The decision to include a number of 'super-ministries' as part of the structure of government, with a the ministry of the economy possibly taking on a leading role under Paulo Guedes could become a source of instability for the next administration. The demands of political bargaining and financial needs for infrastructure development are likely to continue to put pressure on public finances. How far Paulo Guedes' autonomy will extend and how this will affect the balance of power among the members of Cabinet is something to track.

CHALLENGES IN MAKING CABINET APPOINTMENTS

The proposal to appoint a Cabinet of experts (rather than divide portfolios up among politicians from coalition parties) appears to have been accepted in principle by potential coalition allies. However, this does not mean the government will be isolated from political pressure when it comes to making the appointments. This has already become clear by the positions taken by the farming caucus in Congress over who should be appointed as agriculture minister. Furthermore, pressure will be applied to secure politically-backed appointments to the senior management in government departments, state-owned corporations and federal agencies. It remains to be seen how the government will respond to such pressure, as well as how long it can remain wrapped in "technocratic insulation" when faced with the need to build a broad coalition support base in Congress in order to approve structural reforms.

Another matter that deserves attention is how the internal dynamic within the 'super-ministries' will play out. An initial idea that has been floated, which makes practical sense, is to create a type of 'junior minister' function (Secretaria Especial) within each super-ministry, such as special secretaries for Mining and Energy and for Civil Aviation within the Ministry of Infrastructure, for example. Given the sheer number of policy areas the super-ministries will have to manage, these deputy ministers may end up with some degree of autonomy, prestige and standing in government and are therefore expected to be politically sought-after positions. Within such as scenario, intra-departmental conflicts may become common.

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

1. Casa Civil (Executive Office of the President): Likely to incorporate functions currently carried out by the Secretaria de Governo and part of the General Secretariat of the Presidency.

2. Economy: merges the ministries of Finance and Planning and possibly the Ministry of Industry and International Trade

3. Infrastructure: merges the Ministry of Transportation, the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and possibly also the Ministry of Mining and Energy (the latter remains TBC)

4. Ministry of Defense: might also include the Ministry of Public Safety

5. Ministry of Justice

6. Ministry of Foreign Affairs

7. Ministry of Health

8. Ministry of Education: expected to merge with the ministries of Culture and Sport

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

9. Ministry of Agriculture: possibly merged with the Ministry of the Environment

10. Ministry of Science, Technology, Innovation and Communication: the structure is likely to remain untouched, but may lose the communications portfolio to the Ministry of Infrastructure

11. Ministry of Social Affairs: merging the government's social development programs, such as responsibility for land reform and alleviating poverty

12. Central Bank

13. Office of the Solicitor General

14. Office of the Comptroller General and Transparency

15. Office of Institutional Security

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS – UNCERTAINTIES

1. Mining and Energy: may be retained as a standalone portfolio, or merged with the new infrastructure ministry.

2. Environment: despite the incoming administration's initial proposal to merge environment into the Ministry of Agriculture, a possible u-turn has not been ruled out by Bolsonaro.

3. Industry and Trade: initially planned to have been merged into the new super-ministry of the economy led by Paulo Guedes, industry groups have lobbied to keep the portfolio separate.

4. Tourism: could be folded into the Ministry of Industry, should it be retained as a standalone portfolio.

5. Regional Development: may be absorbed by the Ministry of Infrastructure or have its functions divided up among several departments.

6. Human Rights: the possibility of downgrading the ministry and folding it into another department has been floated, but it is not yet clear which ministry could house the portfolio. Two possibilities are the Ministry of Justice and the Ministry of Social Affairs.

NEW CONGRESS: CHALLENGES AND OPPORTUNITIES

The 2018 elections to Congress resulted in the highest turnover rate for members of Congress in the past 20 anos and resulted in yet further fragmentation along party lines. Of the 35 registered political parties in Brazil, 30 managed to elect at least one member of Congress.

Such a high degree of political fragmentation, together with the fact that the President-elect's party (PSL) does not command a majority in either house of Congress and has few natural coalition allies, is the main challenge for the new government.

How the new administration builds and maintains a stable, functioning coalition in Congress in the context of politically challenging reform bills (some of which will require constitutional amendment requiring a three-fifths majority in both houses) will be of utmost importance. On the legislative agenda are sensitive bills including fuel price subsidies, pension reform, tax and labor law reforms, Central Bank independence, settlement with Petrobras over a 5bn BOE oil field contract from 2010, and other important economic matters.

RELATIONS WITH CONGRESS

Bolsonaro spent much of the campaign “negating” the role of political parties and repeating his intention not to negotiate with parties, but “only the best” from within parties and congressional caucuses. If this approach is repeated once the president-elect is sworn into office, the government will face at least two major challenges in building its support base in Congress:

1. How will the lose alliance of so-called ’Center Bloc’ parties organize as a force within Congress? By downplaying the importance of political parties, Bolsonaro may face resistance from the Center Bloc’s leadership, which will almost certainly organize itself as a power base within Congress in order to guarantee influence over the governing coalition. The Center Bloc could, for instance, negotiate a broad alliance of parties at the beginning of the new legislature, which would ensure the group’s ability to elect the Speaker of the House as well as control of important committees such as the Constitutional and Legal Affairs (CCJ) and the Finance and Taxation committees. The group may even negotiate with opposition parties in order to ensure its dominant position in Congress.

2. How viable and efficient will a strategy based on forming a coalition among congressional caucuses as opposed to political parties prove to be? The strength and organizational capacities of congressional caucuses such as the farming, Evangelical and gun lobbies speak for themselves, but are driven by an interest in achieving specific policy goals. Political parties, on the other hand, wield various instruments to whip the votes among their members that sector-based caucuses lack, such as the power to negotiate committee chairs, rapporteurs, appropriations, etc. Will it be possible to sustain a coalition without the explicit support of political parties?

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A BOLSONARO ADMINISTRATION

ECONOMY

Structure: Merges the Ministry of Finance with the Ministry of Planning and possibly the PPI Secretariat (infrastructure planning). The initial idea to also fold in the Ministry of Industry and Trade appears to have been dropped.

Minister: Paulo Guedes (no party affiliation), partner with fund manager Bozano Investimentos and PhD in economics from Chicago University. Several high-ranking members of the current Temer administration's economic team, such as Brazil Treasurer Mansueto Almeida, may be asked to join the new team. For the Central Bank Paulo Guedes will make one or more recommendations as to who should be the next governor of the bank to Chief of Staff Onyx Lorenzoni. The current governor, Ilan Goldfajn, widely respected by the market, may be asked to stay on, but other names are also under consideration. The Central Bank may be granted political independence enshrined in law, but the bank's mandate may be adjusted (for example, the possibility of including exchange rate targets has been floated).

ECONOMY

Economic policy priorities: President Bolsonaro will inherit a country forecast to grow at a rate of 2.4% of GDP in 2019 (IMF). External conditions remain benign, but could turn less favorable depending on how the current trade disputes between the United States and China might impact emerging markets such as Brazil. Despite running a small current account deficit and holding ample international reserves (approx. US$380bn), the impact that a fall in activity (and the resulting drop in tax revenues) that such a shock could have on Brazil's economy so soon after one of the country's deepest recessions could be particularly high. The need to accelerate the current fiscal adjustment is therefore an essential element – if not the top priority – for the incoming administration's economic policy. According to the Senate's independent budget office (IFI), the recurring deficit in the budget is expected to close in 2022 should the economy remain in benign territory. In 2019, if Congress approves a bill allowing an auction of surplus oil from offshore fields, the government has forecast extraordinary revenues of R$100bn, which could alleviate immediate fiscal pressures. The growth of the deficit in the country's social security system is the main factor driving an increase in the gross debt-to-GDP ratio, which has jumped from 50% in 2013 to almost 80% at present. Future Chief of Staff Onyx Lorenzoni has said the incoming economic team has several pensions reform proposals ready, but analysts expect the Bolsonaro administration may allow President Temer's economic team the opportunity to bring its proposal (constitutional amendment 287/16) to a floor vote before the end of the year so that President Bolsonaro can take office with a greater degree of economic confidence. Bolsonaro's economic team have also planned to draft an 'Emergency Employment Plan' in order to stimulate growth in the labor market and reduce the number of Brazil's estimated 13 million jobseekers. One idea is to provide payroll tax relief for companies – a proposal that was adopted during the Rousseff administration but resulted in significant loss of revenue without providing the necessary boost for employment. If this proposal is not carefully structured, it could add further pressure on the government's fiscal adjustment plan.

DEFENSE

Structure: Ministry of Defense

Officeholder: Retired army general Augusto Heleno Ribeiro Pereira, former head of the UN stabilization mission to Haiti (MINUSTAH) between 2004 and 2005 and former head of Brazil's military command for the Amazon Region. Former head of the Army's Science and Technology Department before retiring from active service in 2011.

On the agenda

- As a former military officer himself, president-elect Bolsonaro is likely to be particularly attuned to concerns raised by the military – including military command in particular. For the rank and file, military officers are likely to be insulated from the effects of the pensions reform bill planned by the economic team.
- The government may decide to increase defense spending in order to modernize the Armed Forces and develop projects considered of strategic importance for Brazil, such as territorial monitoring systems (SisGAAz, SISFRON, SIPAM and the Brazilian Space Program), air defense (SISDABRA, FX-2 fighter jets and the acquisition of Embraer KC-390 carrier planes) and maritime defense (submarine program), among others. But due to the economic team's stated priority to cut expenditure, any increase in defense spending is likely to be small and the minimum required to prevent strategic projects from being mothballed.
- Increase the use of the Armed Forces in public safety operations. Currently the Armed Forces are in charge of security in the state of Rio de Janeiro and are deployed in law and order operations in the states of Rio Grande do Norte and Roraima.
- Support in principle for the partnership agreement between Embraer and Boeing.

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A BOLSONARO ADMINISTRATION

INDUSTRY & TRADE

Structure: the trade and industry ministry (MDIC) is likely to remain a standalone body, despite the suggestion that it could be merged into the new economy ministry. The Board of Trade (CAMEX), responsible for setting Brazil's international trade priorities, is expected to continue under the auspices of MDIC, but forward thinking for trade policy – which sat with the Office of Strategic Affairs (SAE) of the Presidency in the Temer administration – may be moved to the economy ministry.

Officeholder: no leading names at present

On the agenda: Maintaining MDIC as a government department in its own right is designed to placate concerns raised by Brazil's industry, which has traditionally been defended by MDIC, that industrial policy could fall afoul of the liberalizing trends of a future economy ministry. For instance, during negotiations for Brazil's new automotive policy ('Road to 2030'), MDIC argued in favor of maintaining fiscal incentives for OEMs, against the preference of the finance ministry. Trade liberalization, which is supported by Paulo Guedes, is likely to be restricted to liberalization within the context of trade negotiations for free trade agreements (there are ongoing negotiations with the EU, EFTA, Canada, Mexico and South Korea). The idea of unilateral tariff liberalization, which was proposed in a study published in March 2018 by the Presidency's Office of Strategic Affairs, is unlikely to prosper due to resistance from domestic industry. In the same vein, discussion around reforming Mercosur – perhaps by abolishing the bloc's customs union and converting it into a simple free trade area – would be difficult to achieve given that such a proposal may delay or potentially derail active trade negotiations.

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A BOLSONARO ADMINISTRATION

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

Structure: Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Itamaraty)

Officeholder: Bolsonaro is expected to appoint a career diplomat as minister. One of the names frequently floated is Ambassador Ernesto Fraga Araujo, currently Director of the foreign ministry's US, Canada and Inter-Americas desk.

Diplomatic rotation to help promote the Bolsonaro administration abroad: conscious of the criticism levied at the president-elect's policy proposals and positions by several major international media outlets over the course of the campaign, the government is expected to recall diplomats considered overly critical of Bolsonaro. Furthermore, Brazil may close a number of smaller diplomatic missions overseas to reduce costs.

Prioritizing relations with traditional partners: this 'pivot' towards re-prioritizing relations with Brazil's traditional economic partners is a move that had already begun under the Temer administration. Bolsonaro has mentioned the US, Israel and Italy as strategic partners. In the case of the US, Brazil's interest may be one-sided. Brazilian steel and aluminum exporters have already been impacted by import restrictions on the US market, and President Trump has criticized Brazil as a difficult place for American firms to do business. The White House may insist on Brazil lowering import tariffs for ethanol, which is likely to be opposed by Brazil's domestic stakeholders.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

China: Restrictions to the entry of Chinese capital in 'strategic' sectors such as energy and agribusiness. Bolsonaro may consider establishing a type of foreign investment review mechanism, similar to that used in other countries, to determine whether such investment poses a challenge to national security. However, any such moves are likely to be done with caution. Incoming Chief of Staff Onyx Lorenzoni has recognized the importance of China as an economic partner for Brazil and has moved to moderate some of the anti-China rhetoric used by Bolsonaro on the campaign trail. China is currently Brazil's largest trading partner and one of the country's largest sources of FDI, accounting for some US$19.5bn between 2014 and 2017, of which two-thirds were channeled into Brazil's energy sector. China is also an importance source of financing for Brazilian companies. Chinese financial institutions authorized loans totaling US$15bn in 2016.

South America: Bolsonaro supports the idea of Brazil regaining its role as a "natural leader" in the region. Regarding Venezuela, the approach taken by the new administration is likely to be more hardline than that taken by the Temer government. Relations between both countries are currently strained.

UN: Bolsonaro has said that Brazil could withdraw from a number of UN bodies. He has been critical of the Human Rights Committee in particular, which twice called on Brazil to allow former President Lula to run in the 2018 elections while his criminal appeal process is ongoing. However, Brazil may take a more considered approach with a diplomat at the head of the foreign ministry.

Middle East: Bolsonaro supports the idea of moving the Brazilian Embassy to Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. He had also stated his intention to withdraw diplomatic accreditation for the Palestinian representation in Brazil.

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A BOLSONARO ADMINISTRATION

INFRASTRUCTURE

Structure: Infrastructure policy will be coordinated by a new 'super-ministry'. The structure may include an environmental licensing team "embedded" within its structure along the lines of the Office of the Solicitor-General or the foreign ministry, which 'lend' members of their teams to other government departments where required to ensure policy alignment. Alternatively, the new infrastructure ministry could absorb competence for environmental licensing altogether. It remains to be seen whether the Ministry of Mining and Energy will be included within the remit of the infrastructure portfolio, or whether it will remain a standalone department.

Officeholder: Oswaldo Ferreira (no party affiliation), a retired general. Former head of the Army's Engineering and Construction Department, which is responsible for coordinating infrastructure projects under the Army's control. General Ferreira is considered the "Paulo Guedes of the infrastructure sector"; i.e. autonomy to lead on infrastructure policy matters across government.

On the agenda: The goal of infrastructure policy has remained broadly unchanged since 2012 – how to ensure that infrastructure projects are built in a context of fiscal restraint. The current list of priority projects under the auspices of the Office of Public-Private Partnerships (PPI) is expected to remain the same under the incoming administration.

WHAT TO EXPECT FROM A BOLSONARO ADMINISTRATION

INFRASTRUCTURE

With public investment capacity much restricted due to the ongoing fiscal adjustment process, both the Rousseff and Temer administrations have sought ways in which to leverage private resources to develop infrastructure projects. The priority of the incoming Bolsonaro administration is likely to continue to focus on removing barriers to project development, such as road surfacing along federal highway BR-163 in the state of Para, diverting the course of the Sao Francisco River and completing works on the Belo Monte Hydroelectric Power Plant. A sensitive issue is how the portfolio will manage environmental licensing for infrastructure projects, which is considered slow and bureaucratic by General Ferreira's team.

Another possibile area of development involves project development through public-private partnerships (PPPs). The model is currently used for a number of infrastructure projects at the state level (e.g. Minas Gerais and Sao Paulo), but has been rarely used for federal projects, with governments preferring public tenders or concession agreements.

The incoming administration is also expected to continue with the policy of early renewal of rail concession agreements and will move forward with preparing new rail projects for tender.

PERSPECTIVAS DO GOVERNO BOLSONARO

ENERGY & NATURAL RESOURCES

Structure: As yet undefined. The currently Ministry of Mines and Energy may be folded into the infrastructure ministry or maintained as a standalone body.

Officeholder: no names mentioned at this stage

On the agenda

Energy policy: In general terms, as stated in Bolsonaro's election manifesto and by members of his energy policy team, the Bolsonaro administration is expected to continue the approach taken by the Temer government to ensure greater economic rationale when it comes to policy-making for the sector. While his policy team have supported the idea of privatizing energy assets, Bolsonaro has ruled out the wholesale privatization of strategic state-owned corporations such as Eletrobras or Petrobras, but has accepted that "non-core" assets owned by these companies could be sold, such as part of Petrobras' refining operations. Fuel pricing is an issue that will come on the agenda with the expiry of temporary subsidies at the end of 2018. Bolsonaro's team have proposed establishing a system for trading mid- to long-term fuel futures contracts as a means of preventing price volatility at the pump. For the electricity sector, the new administration is expected to follow the broad lines of the energy ministry's Public Consultation 33 and legislative bill 1917/15. Renewable energy is expected to continue to play a key role in Brazil's energy mix, both in terms of biofuel development and renewable sources such as hydro, wind and solar power. The likely incoming infrastructure minister, Oswaldo Ferreira, has mentioned the possibility of reopening feasibility studies for major hydro projects in the Amazon region, as well as reactivating works on the Angra 3 nuclear reactor.

ENERGY & NATURAL RESOURCES

Mining: The Bolsonaro administration will be responsible for effectively implementing the mining reform package proposed under the Temer administration and passed by Congress mid-2018, which amended Brazil's mining legislation, adjusted royalties for specific minerals and created a regulatory agency (ANM) for the sector. The reform is designed to open new areas of the country for mining and attract greater investment into the sector via cutting red tape around permitting and resolving land ownership disputes. In recent years, the Amazon has become a focus for new mining projects, given the region holds deposits for strategic minerals such as battery metals and potentially rare earths, as well as traditional metals such as gold and copper. The complexities around mine permitting in an area as ecologically sensitive as the Amazon, however, as well as the negative public opinion around mining in the region (as underscored by the Temer administration's aborted attempt to open the RENCA mining reserve in the Amazon rainforest) are a dissuasive factor to new investments in the region. Bolsonaro considers the region's niobium and graphene reserves to be of particularly strategic benefit for Brazil, and is likely to promote investments for the extraction of those two minerals specifically.
